Destruction of the Globe. In the present age when the network of taleaphy brings all parts of the earth into close tercommunication, we are not likely to trace. en in the most widespread distaters, the propositing destruction of our globe. The me day which brings the intelligence of some solating catastrophe brings evidence also that a devustation is but local. We are seldom formed of simultaneous; or nearly simulta-ous, events happening in widely separated gious of the earth's surface. Accordingly, a grassidom led to dread the occurrence of may idely devastating series of catastrophes. But rightly events have happened dring the past w months which might level nervously dispaed persons to imagine that the inhabitants the carth are not perfectly safe from wide prend destructive agencies. The same week hat brought news of the great harricans which a equal of destructive harrivates in the Indian and Pacific Oceans. Then followed the series earthquakesbooks which have inflicted such jury on the already much tried inhabitants of t. Thomas, and which still continue to be felt intervals. Next we hear of an earliquake in falta, than in Egypt, then at Formosa, then in t Salvador; and now, almost as we write, the reds of the inhabitants of the Sandwich Islands lestroyed by a violent uprush of molten matter. During all this time Vesuvius continues in violent ruption. Thus it has happened that we have heard great deal lately of certain speculations—reently ventilated by an American philosopherwhich threaten the earth with complete annihitstion. According to these views there is one great auger to which we are at all times liable—the isk, namely, that some large volcanic vent hould be formed beneath the bosom of the cean. Through this vent the sen would rush nto the interior of the earth, and being forthwith converted into steam by the intense suberranean heat; would rend the mussive shell on which we live into a thousand fragments. Whether it is possible or not that such an event s this should take place, we shall not here stay o inquire. Let it suffice that the risk-if there e any-is no greater now than it has been any ime during thousands of years past.—Cornhill

Gambling at an American Watering A correspondent of the Morning Post, weiing from Saratoga, says :-- "The real passion of the place seems to be gambling. There are no public gaming rooms as at Baden-Baden, and the laties but only at the races. But there are lozens, perhaps scores, of fare banks, roulette ables, and sweat cloths, at which gambling goes on all day and all the night long. The right after my arrival at Saratoga a friend lub bouses, where, as he assured me, 'the hing is done on the square. It was near midnight when we left the ballroom of the pora-house, for Saratoga has its temple for the drams' as well as other joys. A founfor the drams' as well as other joys. A four-tain was playing merrily in the garden, and in the bright gleam of the gas-lights that shone upon it, its spray seemed to be like golden mist. Beneath the trees, stated in cosy chairs, wore groups of people—smoking, gossiping, and per-haps love-making. Fifth the open window of the brill room came the mesic of the Grand Duchesse' and La Belle Releas' quadrilles. Offenbasi's music being all the rage just now. At the end, of the garden we found a in rose hushes. A negro, attired in evening fross, answered the belt and conducted us to a parlour, where the proprietor of the ceta-blishment received up. His courtesy was perfect, he was happy to see in his house a gen-tleman from England, especially when he was accompanied by so distinguished a member we would join him and them at supper There are two rooms in which fare is playing. The moms are softly corpored, the and speciators sit are inxuriously cushioned; the voice of the dealer is low and monotonous, the players scarcely speak at all; werything is very quiet. Here is a judge one of the principal courts in files of the American. The house was well filled to-night; if we would accompany him through the rooms he would point out for us the notabilities present, and then he would be charmed York; he is playing and winning, but he does not bet heavily. At his side is a military hero those fame once filled the land. He has had ad luck to-night, and he scowls somewhat savagely as he juigles the ivery checks in his aind. A professional gambler, who is likewise member of Congress, who owns the finest gaming-house in Washington, and who has betted $90,000 on the election of Scymour, is at the same table. He is a very good fellow in his way, being perfectly honest, and exceedingly charitable, but he is not a very welcome guest at this or other fare banks, since he sometimes amuses himself by coming to play with in immense amount of money, and breaking, the bank.' At one of the other tables is a merchart who comes to Saratoga every year with exactly $20,600, and who gambles every night until the last dollar is spent, when he goes quietly home again, and does nut look at a card for nine months. In another room there is roulette; in another monte; on the floor about there are half a dozen smaller rooms, in which little groups of men . - playing 'draw poker' and betting heavily. I ker and fore are the two most popular games . America-there is just enough calculation required in playing them to add to the ordinary fascination of gaming. The average amount of money won and lost in this house nightly is $300,000; there have been times when half a million has changed hands in a night. The players are exceedingly well be-baved. I saw no pigeon plucked, heard no catha and could see nothing that looked like rascality. The supper, which was served in a very pleasant hall, was faultless, and the wines butter than I have seen anywhere, save at Delmonico's, in New York." 7 ----
